3. The City of Bjerringbro

Bjerringbro is a picturesque town situated in the Central Denmark Region (Midtjylland), within Viborg Municipality. As of January 2024, it has a population of approximately 7,422 residents, making it the second-largest town in the municipality after Viborg itself.

Nestled along the Gudenå River—the longest river in Denmark—Bjerringbro is located between the cities of Viborg and Randers. The town developed around a bridge constructed in 1838 and expanded significantly after the establishment of a railway station in 1863. Today, it is well-connected by rail and road, with Route 525 passing just north of the town center.

Bjerringbro is internationally recognized as the headquarters of Grundfos, the world's largest pump manufacturer. Founded in 1945 by Poul Due Jensen, Grundfos remains a major employer and a cornerstone of the town's economy.

The town offers a blend of cultural and historical attractions. The Gudenåhuset serves as a cultural hub, hosting events and exhibitions. Nearby, the Gudenådalens Museum provides insights into the region's agricultural history. For those interested in energy and technology, the Energimuseet near Tange Lake showcases Denmark's energy evolution.

Bjerringbro's location along the Gudenå River makes it ideal for outdoor activities such as kayaking, fishing, and hiking. The surrounding landscapes offer opportunities for camping and nature walks, appealing to both residents and visitors.
